JACL urges Clinton to stay firm on end to military ban on gays

Keep your promise Mr. President, said a group of civil rights organizations, including JACL, June 30 urging Clinton to stand by his commitment to lift the ban on gays in the military. The group also called on the president to reject Sen. Sam Nunn's "don't ask, don't tell" proposal that would continue the ban, but end the military policy of asking about sexual preference.

Speaking at the gravesite of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in Atlanta, Coretta Scott King said, "The great promise of American democracy is that no group of people will be forced to suffer forms of discrimination in the military and to accept no compromises which undermine the principles of fairness and human dignity."

Karen Narasaki, JACL Washington, D.C., representative, said, "To deny people the opportunity to serve in the military regardless of merit violates the very constitutional principles that the gallant men and women in the armed service risk their lives to uphold."

Tempe, Ariz., cop talk includes racism

What happens when racism wears a badge?

Nine Tempe, Ariz., police officers were named in a $66 million lawsuit filed in December, 1991, against the city accusing the police of using anti-Semitic tactics to close a local nightclub.

Reported in the June 29 Phoenix Gazette, Greg and Mike Field, owners of Rowdy's, accuse the officers of harassing and intimidating customers because the men are Jewish.

Among the alleged offenses include using anti-Jewish slurs, trying to force the owners to increase drink prices and illegally confiscating videotapes of police actions. Tempe city officials said the allegations are unfounded. Ron Dunham, assistant city attorney, said repeated liquor license violations led to the monitoring of the establishment by the police.

Lt. Steve Graehling, one of the officers named in the suit, in a deposition admitted to calling minorities "niggers, kikes, spics, and wetbacks" during conversations with other officers.

Graehling, a 22-year veteran, said he would never use the slurs with the public, but said the word "nigger" is used by officers to describe blacks and those acting in an "anti-social behavior."

Another officer in the suit, C.W. Tucker, admitted to collecting Nazi paraphernalia.

Can we talk—better?

Some police officers believe the racist cop talk will wane as more police departments begin to hire more minorities and teach cultural diversity, according to Cpl. Mitch Kelsey, a Glendale, Ariz., police spokesman.

According to the Phoenix Gazette, Kelsey said police departments will begin to clean up their language acts in time, but added that "Derogatory name calling is not by any means gone, but it's not as regular as it was in the 1970s."

Not everyone agrees. Reacting to the slurs, Perry Ealim, Phoenix spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said, "Police still have an us-against-them attitude, making racist comments commonplace."

Hate crimes video out

Combating hate crime, the National Network Against Anti-Asian Violence (NNAAV) in San Francisco recently presented their 30-second public service announcement, "Stop the Hurt," reported the Nichi Bei Times. The video, which is available in English, Korean, Chinese, and Vietnamese, includes information on local community resources which assist hate crime victims.

"The most important reason for making this video is to help educate the public about hate crimes and anti-Asian violence," said Yvonne Lee, executive director, Chinese American Citizens Alliance.

Joining Lee were Lillian Kimura, national president, JACL; Doreena Wong, staff attorney, Asian Law Caucus and Isabel Huie, Chinese for Affirmative Action.

"No one should be victims of hate crimes but many people are. We want people to know if they are victims, there are things they can do," said Wong.

The public service announcement is scheduled to be shown on San Francisco's Channel 26 during the Chinese, Korean and Vietnamese programming. Wong said the video had been shown in Washington, D.C., Los Angeles, New York and San Francisco.

Asian Pacific group meets with Reno

Janet Reno, U.S. attorney general, whose open style has made her a reluctant star in the Clinton Administration, recently met with Asian Pacific American and Hispanic civil rights organizations to discuss legal and civil issues facing both communities.

Among the issues discussed were immigration and naturalization, the Voting Rights Act language assistance enforcement, hate crimes, English-only and police abuse.

Both groups, in organizing the meeting, noted that Asian Pacific Americans and Hispanics share problems of language and culture and have also been historically underserved by the U.S. Department of Justice.

"We have been very impressed with the attorney general's commitment to civil rights and her sensitivity to the unique barriers faced by Asian Pacifics and Hispanics," said Karen Narasaki, JACL Washington, D.C., representative.

Attending were: the Organization of Chinese Americans, the Chinese American Citizens Alliance, Asian Law Caucus, Asian Pacific American Legal Defense and Education Fund, National Council of La Raza, National Puerto Rican Council and the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

VANCOUVER, B.C.—Art Miki, who if successful will be the first Nikkei in Canada's House of Commons in Ottawa, declared that "we as Canadians are now ready to expand our horizons and participation in the global community." The immediate past president of the National Association of Japanese Canadians (NAJC) was keynote speaker at the 7th Pan American Nikkei Association (PANA) Sayonara banquet Saturday, July 3, at Pan-Pacific Hotel at Canada Place.

Liberal Party candidate Miki of Winnipeg, an educator in Manitoba the past 17 years and a human rights, multiculturalism advocate, was awarded the Order of Canada in 1991, the nation's highest award in recognition of outstanding work for his country. The election date is pending, sometimes this fall.

As NAJC president, Miki led

Voting of overseas Japanese discussed

At the closing session of the PANA Convention delegates discussed the issue of voting rights of overseas Japanese citizens who have been unable to express their political choices in Japan. That the resolution was proposed by PANA-USA president Noritoshi Kanai of Los Angeles at the delegates' final session gave an unexpected charge to an otherwise calm, pro-forma atmosphere of best wishes and acknowledgments.

The Japanese government, it was understood, is currently considering a resolution submitted from the Overseas Japanese Association convention held last May in Tokyo.

Kanai, a permanent U.S. resident, estimates

Out-going EEOC official details glass ceiling, model minority myth

Speaking at the June 25 Annual Conference of the Chinese American Librarians Association in New Orleans, La., a commissioner of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) detailed the past history of private and government-sanctioned discrimination in the U.S. against immigrants from Asia.

After acknowledging the most egregious forms of discrimination encountered by black Americans and Native Americans, EEOC Commissioner Joy Cherian said: "Many African Americans were brought to this country forcibly as slaves. But then, Asians are the only racial group that have ever been singled out in this country from even immigrating on the basis of their race and denied the right to become citizens."

In his last major speech as an EEOC commissioner before he leaves government service, Cherian expressed dismay at the number of times during his six years in office he had faced the question whether Asian Americans were entitled to be even considered a minority or had any legitimate claims to historical discrimination in this country. He stated that the "model minority" myth about Asian Americans had blinded many public officials as well as private-sector decision makers to the real discrimination faced by highly qualified Asian Americans, even those who had immigrated to this country as recently as the last two decades.

Cherian mentioned specific cases of discrimination that he had ruled on, along with other Members of the Commission, which unquestionably demonstrate the real glass ceiling recent immigrants from Asia have faced in federal employment.

Dr. Cherian released data showing a gross disparity between the numbers of Asian American professionals employed in private industry and their employment as officials and managers. Over 38,000 private employers who had filed reports with the EEOC in 1991 disclosed that over 5% of all professionals employed by them are Asian Americans. But the reports showed that Asian Americans are less than 2% of all officials and managers employed in those same establishments.

Cherian commented: "Among the minority groups for which we collect these data, Asian Americans are the only ones that are disproportionately under-represented in the management positions by comparison to their participation rates in professional jobs." He added: "Please don't get me wrong. I don't suggest that all of this is due to discrimination, nor that all managers and officials necessarily come from among the ranks of professionals. But those numbers are like the numbers on a thermometer: they don't tell you what disease the patient has, but they surely tell you you'd better ask the doctor."

Cherian, whose official term expire at the end of July and who has not been reappointed to the job, then told the community and professional leaders that they have an important role to play in dismantling this true glass ceiling that Asian Americans face along with other minorities and women. He asked the corporate leaders to "encourage the selection of boards of directors with sensitivity to issues affecting women and minorities." But having minority or women directors will not of itself "guarantee the kind of sensitivity it takes to shatter the glass ceiling. Every director selected should have appropriate education, relevant experience, and genuine sensitivity to issues" related to the glass ceiling. He suggested the need for senior human resources' officials to organize appropriate sensitivity training and educational programs for their supervisors and managers.

EEOC enforces federal laws prohibiting discrimination in employment. The federal laws enforced by the EEOC (and the bases on which those laws protect individuals) are: Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (race, color, religion, sex, national origin); the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (age 40 and over); the Equal Pay Act of 1963 (sex); and portions of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (disabilities).

Arizona Chapter president writes to Texas senator about 'Jap Road'

Support for the two Houston Chapter, JACL, women battling to change the name of Jap Road in Beaumont, Texas, continues to grow. Arizona Chapter President Joe Allman has followed up with another letter, this time to Texas Republican Sen. Phil Gramm, asking for his assistance in resolving the matter.

In the June 29 letter, Allman said, "We can appreciate the original intent of honoring the Japanese American farmers; however, since World War II the term 'Jap' has taken on an ugly and demeaning connotation and we have been asking that the useage of 'Jap' be discontinued."

Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary lists "Jap" as "usually used disparagingly."

Allman had previously sent a similar letter dated June 24 to Jefferson County, Texas, Commissioner Mark Domingue, who said that the Jap Road name would remain since local residents had no desire to change it.

This was followed on June 28 by letters from JACL National President Lillian Kimura and JACL Regional Director Bill Yoshino. Kimura related similar information about the use of the racial epithet.

N.Y. Nikkei paper stops publication

After 48 years, the New York Nichibeï, ceased publication July 1. Isaku Kida, president, Japanese American News Corporation, said, "We have been publishing our paper under severe financial pressure for some time, especially for the past two years."

The president said the board of directors met June 13 and decided to close the operations.

Edward Moran, English editor, said in his final column, "As one of many chroniclers of the Japanese American experience from 1988 to 1993, I've learned much about myself and about the real-deal guts of things. For this I will be forever grateful."

plauded at the Sayonara banquet. Roy T. Inouye, national NAJC president, of Kamloops, B.C., convention co-chair, and Dr. Henry Shimizu, JCRF chair, of Edmonton, both noted the success of the convention and the enthusiastic comments from participants—local, out-of-town, and from the U.S. and Latin America.

"It made us (Japanese Canadians) realize we have arrived at the gateway of global liaison and to be able to communicate, interchange ideas and better relate with Nikkei in other countries," Inouye added. The JC Redress Foundation funds projects that develop Japanese Canadians fully as individuals and as a community, and, in this respect, globally as well.

This was PANA-Canada's first convention with some 200 Nikkei from outside Canada. Of that number, 110 came up from the United States, convention coordinator Shigeko Ando noted. Sizeable contingents came from Mexico, Brazil, Peru, and Paraguay as well as from Argentina, Uruguay, Chile, Colombia, and Japan.

PANA

the intense Japanese Canadian campaign and co-signed the redress agreement on behalf of NAJC with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney in 1988 that acknowledges the WWII treatment of JCs was "unjust and violated principles of human rights." Besides individual payments, a $12 million fund was established as community compensation to be allocated to deserving projects. The fund has been oversubscribed by some 500 applications, it was learned from a foundation committee member.

Toy manufacturer Carlos Kasuga of Mexico was re-elected PANA International president, an honor and responsibility he has assumed since 1981 when the first PANA convention was held in Mexico City.

A Sayonara highlight was

Canada's Mark Ando, PANA International 2nd vice president, passed the symbolic baton, "El Testimonio," which was in his care the past biennium, to Peru's Luis Sakoda, PANA International 1st vice president, to show confidence in the recipient for the next PANA convention.

Close to 500 participants were registered, including the 36 karaoke contestants from Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Peru, U.S. and Canada. Carmen Kobashigawa of Peru won the first prize.

"Shag" Ando, Tony and Kim Tamayose coordinated more than Canadian Nikkei conference volunteers and youth, who were cited from their hospitality during the four-day affair.

JAPAN

300,000 overseas Japanese in the 10 PANA countries, are being denied the right to participate in the process. "It is the natural right of a citizen being able to vote," he said in explaining his motion, which was seconded for purposes of discussion.

The support which PANA could give, according to Kanai, would strengthen PANA's mission of cooperation and friendship in North and South America. The PANA International executive board tabled the proposal.

A delegate from Mexico, Enrique Shibayama, opposed the Kanai resolution, explaining, "We in PANA should run parallel with OJA (Overseas Japanese Association), not cross over with them." An Issei participant from Brazil, who said he left Japan 30 years ago, said that while he was a Japanese citizen he has no interest in voting and opposed the resolution.

An Argentine participant said this issue of suffrage for overseas Japanese has come up annually at OJA conventions. He said the matter was always accompanied by stories of how much the Issei struggled in America.

In Mexico, the PANA organization is regarded as an all-Mexican citizen group. In the U.S., PANA has no citizenship distinction, "Nikkei" meaning "persons of Japanese ancestry."

Randy Enomoto, presiding at the final session, called for a show of hands to have the motion adopted and referred to the PANA International executive board for consideration.

At OJA conferences, voting rights in Japan is also tied to another emotional issue—pensions for Japanese citizens overseas. This, however, was not addressed at the PANA event.

Booklet on Internment

The motion calling for PANA to coordinate a publication of the comparative histories of WWII exclusion, internment, and eventual resolution with redress was passed. It was submitted by Roy Miki, moderator of the panel on internment, where many were shocked by the treatment of the Japanese Peruvians who were arrested and taken to the U.S. for internment as "enemy aliens." Peru-born Lidia Yamamoto, now of Hayward, Calif., related the story of some 2,000 from Peru who, when the war ended, were told they had two alternatives: Don't come back to Peru or go to Japan. (Editor's note: Some 300 Japanese Mexican families were ordered away in January, 1942, from the coast and U.S. borders. They abandoned their property and resettled without government assistance in Mexico City or Guadalajara.)

"The internment story with an international concept is a different story in the history of redress and should be documented," the session chair was told by a participant. "We, Canadians, didn't know about the Peruvians being interned." While this resolution was unanimously adopted and presented to the PANA executive board, the sense was that there would no action until the executive board meets in 1995. Another factor is the problem of attaining funds as PANA's budget is chiefly expended for staging the conference, observed a delegate from Peru.

Opinions

From the frying pan

BILL HOSOKAWA

A well written past

Bill Sakayama's travels have taken him to many places—from a Central California farm to the University of Nebraska just ahead of the Evacuation, to the University of Colorado, to the Military Intelligence Service Language School in Minnesota, to Occupation duty in Japan, to Boston University, to the steel export business, to Otagiri Mercantile. He now lives in retirement in Florham Park, N.J.

In all that time he never lost track of a now-yellowing and crumbling scrapbook into which is pasted newspaper and magazine clippings, not of news events but writings which he considered memorable. He sent me the scrapbook recently for perusal. I found among the clippings the work of a veritable Who's Who of Nisei writers going back to the late 1930s and the very early 1940s. Here are some of them:

Larry Tajiri, his wife Marion and brother Vince, writing on a variety of subjects.

John Fujii telling tales about the interesting characters he'd met or heard of while bumming around.

Joe Oyama, recounting the merits and demerits of cheap hotels he had to stay in while traveling up and down California, and exploring the Deep South.

Tsuyoshi Matsumoto, a Japanese minister, being very earnest in a column titled "To the Nisei." Matsumoto's writing takes up many pages of the scrapbook. That may be more a reflection of what impressed Sakayama at the time than of the Rev. Mr. Matsumoto's writing skills.

Other by-lines that are represented in the scrapbook include George Furiya, Roku Sugahara, Kimpei Sheba, George Yasukochi, Stanley Shimabukuro, Dyke Miyagawa, Hideo Okusako, Robert Tsuda, Paul Iida and Kazumaro (Buddy) Uno, many now dead, many well-remembered by Nisei who grew up in that prewar era. There may be others I missed.

In those times there seemed to be no shortage of Nisei willing and able to share their thoughts in writing and, if Sakayama's scrapbook is any indication, there were readers who were impressed by the literary efforts.

Some of the writing stands up well today. Unfortunately, such were the times that few of the aspiring writers—aside from notables like Larry Tajiri and John Fujii—had the opportunity to go on to write for larger audiences as journalists or authors. Among the exceptions is Sheba, Japanese rather than Nisei, who became news editor of the Japan Times and editor of the Asahi Evening News, both English language publications.

What interested Sakayama, judging from the clippings he kept, were earnest discussions about racial discrimination and economic opportunity (or, more accurately, the lack of it) for young Japanese Americans. But Sakayama also kept clippings of Nisei doing things unusual for Nisei of those times, leaving the beaten path to explore new areas of activity, and there were many of them.

Sakayama's scrapbook was a window to the past. Assuming that the files of most prewar Japanese American publications are gone or unavailable, scrapbooks like his should make an interesting study for Yonsei and Gosei seeking to understand their origins. ☐

JIN KONOMI

My Santa Maria days

My hydrogen bomb article (P.C., Nov. 13, 1992) was a dud to humiliate me forevermore. I ended up by bragging what a naughty fellow I was, but failed to explain how it was that I, a meek and timid lad then, felt so encouraged to cut up the way I had. I think it is more important and to the point than how mischievous I was.

In 1923, the Santa Maria Junior College was in the becalmed eye of the anti-Japanese storm that raged in the outside world. Hiram Johnson who, as governor in 1913, had signed into law California's state policy to deny land ownership to aliens deemed unassimilable—meaning the Japanese, was now the U.S. senator and was pushing hard for the total ban of Japanese immigration, including the so-called picture brides.

President Coolidge was opposed to such a policy, but in those days the presidents did not have the imperial power and prestige of the Reagan-Bush presidency. When the bill was put on the floor, Ambassador Hagiwara Masanao of Japan, who was not known for making fiery statements, stirred up a furor—I think Congress was putting on an act—when he said such a law would lead to "grave consequences." The poor man was recalled. And the bill was passed. But I'm running a year ahead of my story.

One of the best sellers of the year was The Pride of Palomar by Peter B. Kyne. I have completely forgotten what the story was about, what the names of the main characters were, except that of the villain—Baron Harada.

Viewed against the political and social reality of those times, there was an almost dream-like quality to the three years I spent in Santa Maria. But what I was feeling was not altogether euphoria, but I had solid reasons for my happiness. With my limited experience of life, and immature thinking ability, I could not formulate them at that time.

What I could only feel, and that vaguely, are now becoming clear as I read more and more about the way Japan's public schools are (prison-like, petty, meddlesome rules and regulations that extend beyond school hours, compulsory group activities, emphasis on rote learning, dress and personal grooming codes, etc.) and, especially, what the young returnees must undergo at the hands of students who never left home (bully-ragging, backbiting, open ridicule, exclusion from group plays, etc.)

I came to America mentally braced to meet some unpleasantness. But at the Santa Maria High School I did not experience any. Usually I was alone, but I had never been a mixer in Japan. To begin with, most of my high school classmates were kind and a few of them went out of their way to be helpful. In two years I had a working command of English and had caught up with U.S. history and civics.

I had lost much of my native shyness and mostly forgotten my consciousness of a separate identity. I could act as "one of them" in the still tiny junior college which was only two years old. Jack Grisinger, Roseborough Vance and I used to do all our homework in the J.C. Reading Room before going home and so a mutual feeling of comradeship developed.

Altogether I was feeling so free that I never stopped to think of the consequences

Wants support for Nikkei Texans battling 'Jap Road'

I am very concerned about the lack of practical support by the staff and national JACL regarding the efforts of two Nikkei women and the Houston Chapter, JACL, to change the name of "Jap Road" in Beaumont (Texas).

It is especially important that we work with chapters which are in areas which are not the centers of Japanese American activities and organizations.

We need to give them names of people and groups they can contact for help. Particularly effective would be the presence of military men, both Japanese Americans and Texans who participated in efforts of the "Lost Battalion" during World War II. I understand the JA's were designated "honorary Texans."

There are civil rights organizations, human relations groups, and other ethnic and church people who would respond to their efforts. The people of Beaumont need to know that "Jap" is as offensive as any other racial epithet... would the people tolerate the term "Nigger Road," or "Kike Road?"

The two women, Sandra Nakata and Betty Waki, should be commended for their courageous stand. That they have to withstand personal threats is a very serious situation.

I urge the national JACL and staff to give priority in time and effort to the Texas JACL chapter. Discuss options and strategy, and names of organizations and people. Can the other chapters help?

And hopefully, attention will be paid to

Editor's Note: Concern such as yours has generated action. JACL National President Lillian Kimura sent a letter to a Beaumont official June 28 in support of Sandra Tanamachi Nakata and Betty Waki, as did Arizona Chapter, JACL, President Joe Allman in a June 24 letter. Similarly, JACL Midwest Regional Director Bill Yoshino sent a June 28 letter to the local newspaper, re-affirming the position that the word "Jap" is considered a racial slur. Allman has since followed up with another letter to Sen. Phil Gramm (R-Texas). See story on page 3.

of whatever I did in terms of its diplomatic implications. And what is most relevant to the "bomb" story, I had regained my mischievousness.
Years afterwards, I found out that my days in Santa Maria were not at all so extraordinary; that many of my Japanese friends also had enjoyed the freedom and tolerance of the school environment and been showing kindness and friendship. And I knew that in the midst of the pervading anti-Japanese agitations there were enclaves of old, native American hospitality in which the people, and even children, were big-hearted and considerate toward foreigners whom they saw as needing their help. It was my extreme good fortune to have seen and lived in America before that America passed into memory.
I hope I have managed to make some sense of that nonsensical story about my sodium bombs. ☺
