ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The Seattle Chapter JACL gratefully acknowledges the generous donation of $250.00 from Taul Watanabe. Watanabe is vice president of Burlington Northern and member of the Board of Regent at the University of Washington. Being a lawyer, financier and businessman, his accomplishments in the three Western states will fill pages. Watanabe was influential in inducing Gov. Ray to run for office with donation promising financial backings from others. Rest is history.

FROM THE BOARD:

Barbara Yoshida who was last traveling in South America was here to attend the meeting. She was on the committee here to induce the school board to draft resolutions in reference to the use of offensive racial slurs and to require these persons to receive psychological help. The incident was at Seattle School District office. Another recommended resolution called for staff training in human multi-ethnic relations. These were acted at the board.

Mako Nakagawa made motion to support Vegetable Soup Program for getting kids to get pluralistic attitudes in children. Motion passes.

Don Kazama is on the coordinating school board council and wants an alternate named.

During recent "Canadian Japanese American Experience in WWII" at WWSC, the "no-no" information was brought up as well as the Issei Internment Camp. $800 was granted from WWSC and funds also came from U.S. Archive for this conference. Paul Isaki said the conference was designed to affect certain group of people and Nikkei was not among them. Letters will be written to assure Nikkei get their share of involvement in such future conferences.

ISSEI CONCERNS RECEIVES $130,000 GRANT

Issei Concerns, founder and operator of the Seattle Keiro Nursing Home for elderly Japanese, has received a 50%-matching grant of $130,000 from the Japan Shipbuilding Industry Foundation in Tokyo for the Keiro expansion project. Notification of the grant was made by Ryoichi Sasakawa, president of the Shipbuilding Foundation, to Tomio Moriguchi, president of Issei Concerns.

The grant was officially approved by the Japanese Ministry of Transportation. The recommendation for awarding the funds to the Keiro project was made by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, with strong endorsement by Toshihiro Nakajima, director-general, American Affairs Bureau of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and by Kenichi Yanagi, Consul-General of Japan at Seattle.

Mr. Sasakawa stated the grant was to be used for the care and welfare of Issei pioneers who "underwent extreme hardships to establish a foothold in America for themselves and their children." In accepting the grant on behalf of Issei Concerns, Moriguchi acknowledged the concerted efforts of Consul-General Yanagi and Consul Kiyoshi Nishikawa of the Seattle Consulate-General; Issei Concerns board member Ken Nakano.

Moriguchi said the generous grant would enable Issei Concerns to proceed on schedule with its plans to expand the Keiro dining room by some 2,000 square feet to concentrate a critically needed multi-purpose activity area and also other support facilities, and by so doing vastly improve the quality of care administered to patients. Moriguchi explained that Issei Concerns will match the $130,000 grant with $30,000 from its general fund and the $100,000 it will raise in its capital-improvement drive currently under way.

The Seattle Keiro Nursing Home was opened in October 1976 following an intensive campaign to raise $500,000 in the Nikkei community. It is a 63-bed facility whose fundamental purpose is to provide nursing care for elderly Japanese in a compatible bilingual and bicultural environment.

Shortly after its opening, it was evident the nursing home fulfilled a definite need among aging Issei. In a little over a year, the home was filled to capacity, with a waiting list of some 20 applicants.

Unlike other nursing homes, Keiro has an exceptionally high percentage of patients participating in various activities conducted by staff and volunteers, which has had a beneficial effect on the mental and physical well-being of patients. This situation has caused a shortage of space to adequately carry out programs for patients, thereby necessitating expansion of existing facilities for group care and activities.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF SEATTLE KEIRO

Seattle Keiro is a 63-bed nursing home that specializes in the care of the elderly, non-English speaking Japanese. The purpose of Seattle Keiro is to provide nursing home care for those elderly, non-English speaking Japanese who require such services. The nursing care, the activities, and the dietary program are designed to meet the unique language, cultural, and nutritional needs of the Issei.

In September, 1975, a group of concerned Nisei formed a non-profit corporation called Issei Concerns. The corporation was formed to investigate the need and to determine the level of support for the purchase and operation of a nursing home. After many meetings throughout the Japanese community, it was decided to begin a fund raising campaign to raise $500,000 for the purchase, remodeling, and operation of a 63-bed nursing home that was not occupied. By July 1, 1976, enough money had been raised to purchase the facility. The next three months were spent repairing and repainting the nursing home. All the work was done by many dedicated, hard working volunteers. During this time, several hundred people donated their time and talents.

The Board of Directors of Issei Concerns began growing. All the Japanese Community churches and organizations were asked to send a representative to be a Board Member of Issei Concerns. The Board of Directors decided to name the nursing home Seattle Keiro. The term "Keiro" means "respected elder." On September 19, 1976, Seattle Keiro was officially dedicated. An open house was held which was attended by over 700 persons. On October 4, 1976, the first patient was admitted. Since then, Keiro has grown steadily. Full occupancy has been reached and a waiting list exists.

Once in operation, Seattle Keiro developed a style of personalized, concerned care for each patient. Extra time and care is taken to provide the best of nursing care, activities, and diet. Bilingual staff are available in nursing to determine the basic health care needs of each patient. The unique activity program that has been developed is second to none in the State of Washington. Daily activities that are attended by 90% to 100% of the patients are offered. Over 60 volunteers come on a weekly basis.

Japanese style meals are served daily. The extra time required to prepare such meals is well worth the effort so that we can provide the patients with the foods to which they are accustomed. The patients appear healthier, happier, and more comfortable, in our bilingual, bicultural setting.

Prior to the opening of Seattle Keiro, the elderly, non-English speaking Japanese in other nursing homes were isolated, disliked the food, and did not participate in the activities program. The patients at Seattle Keiro do not stay in their rooms, participate in the activities, and receive Japanese style meals. They can converse with each other, family, volunteers, and staff. This opportunity was not available before. For those who need nursing Keiro History (Cont'd): home care, Seattle Keiro can provide it in a bilingual, bicultural setting and with dignity and respect. Seattle Keiro has been the largest project undertaken in our community. The many organizations and churches as well as the hundreds of individuals have made Keiro the success it is today.

HARA TO LEAVE AUDITOR'S POST

A pitched battle may take place when the County Council enters the final stage of a process to choose a new county auditor. The Council tomorrow (June 2) will interview five finalists for the office, which Lloyd Hara is leaving at the end of June.

Hara, the only person to hold the job since its creation more than eight years ago, is being forced out as the result of mounting conflicts with various Council members and County Executive John Spellman. Most of Hara's problems stem from several recent audit reports critical of various county administrative operations.--The Seattle Times

MEDICAL TREATMENT GRANTED TO FOREIGN A-BOMB SURVIVORS BY JAPANESE SUPREME COURT

In a major decision handed down on March 29, 1978, the Japanese Supreme Court has ruled that atomic bomb survivors ("hibakusha") from foreign countries may receive certification for special medical treatment. This decision reverses the country's long-standing policy of denying certification to hibakusha who lacked Japanese citizenship or did not meet formal residency requirements.

In his pronouncement before the court, Supreme Court Justice Hajime Kishimori held that "the hibakusha were brought about because of the war between Japan and the United States, and that the Atomic Bomb Medical Relief Law has but one humanitarian goal: to help the victims of the atomic bomb. Therefore, as long as the hibakusha are in our country, we must recognize the equal application of the law, without exception, and apply the spirit of this law accordingly." (Asahi Shimbun - 3/30/78)

The Korean Association of Atomic Bomb Survivors, which organized support for Mr. Shinto Son, had raised questions over the ineligibility of non-Japanese hibakusha to receive medical attention. They pointed to a report issued by the Korean Women's League which stated that 90% of the hibakusha in Korea had difficulties with daily activities and almost all wished to receive medical treatment in Japan.

The Committee of Atomic Bomb Survivors in the United States has taken a different approach. Led by Mr. Kanji Kuramoto of Alameda, it has appealed to President Carter for special medical compensation, but this effort has been unsuccessful to date. In addition, Congressman Roybal of Los Angeles has introduced three bills (HR 5150, HR 8440, and HR 10502) to Congress. These bills are currently being considered by the Judiciary subcommittee on Administrative Law and Government Relations which held a special public hearing in Los Angeles on March 31, 1978. So far, the bills have not secured sufficient congressional support for passage.

The recent Japanese Supreme Court decision allows Japanese American hibakusha to receive certificates which qualifies them for medical treatment in Japan. While the legal barrier has been eliminated, it is expected that the high costs of an extended stay in Japan, however, will place a heavy burden on the hibakusha.

PERSONAL THOUGHTS ON JAPAN TRIP (PART II)

by E. Nagaoka

There are shrines and temples and churches in Japan. Shinto religion in Japan embraces both the nature and ancestor worship. One of their deity is the Sun Goddess (amaterasu-o-mikami). And there are many other deities. Its popularity lies in its Japanese origin and probably helps enhance the Japanese identity. Shinto shrine has a torii or gate at the entrance. In contrast the Buddhist temple will have bell towers and pagoda as well as extravagant altar.

The only church where I visited was the ultra modern St. Mary's Catholic Cathedral which was across the street from the Chinzanso Garden Restaurant, our first luncheon stop on the tour. The Cathedral is constructed of stainless steel, vertical glass wall, and boast the largest pipe organ in Japan.

Yasukuni Shrine atop Kudan Hill in Tokyo, according to the worshippers, is the dwelling place for deified spirits of the war dead. Which means all the relatives of the enshrined person is also a relative of deified persons and imposes responsibility of some sort. This shrine is not a memorial. Before each major battle in warfare, army buddies will assure each other with "I'll meet you in Yasukuni Jinja." More than 2.2 millions were deified in high level ceremonies in Yasukuni including the school girls recruited from classrooms for combat nursing services in the Battle of Okinawa during WW2. In the past, ceremonial processions were led by the military bands with ranking admirals and generals participating with the high priests. Time may have changed. In my last visit there with Kazuo Ito during Cherry Blossom Festival, no military uniform was in evidence. We watched one Festival Ceremony where 20 priests in white robes stood in formation. They turned right-face and solemnly proceeded single file into the sanctuary of Yasukuni with their wooden clogs clattering in unison.

One of the side tours took me to Togenuki Jizo Temple in Tokyo. The unlikely name of Togenuki means "sliver pulling." Jizo can be translated as "a guardian deity of children." We weren't concerned with the sliver at this time but the prime interest was in the stone Jizo statuettes lined in rows outside the Temple.

"Why are these stone images covered with children's clothing?" I asked.

"These clothings belonged to the children now dead and were placed there by their mothers. Notice all the bottles of milk, fruits and other goodies placed in front of the altars," the guide said.

We were watching the two ladies praying in front of the altars. "They're assuring their beloved ones that they will both be together again," the guide said. Suddenly I felt compassion for them wanting to extend the hand of sympathy.

Japan has a homogenous make-up in their population. Yet Japan is able to produce statistics of at least 300,000 persons of Chinese ancestry (less than 0.3 of 1%). In the visit to Yokohama which incidentally was reduced to a rubble in the last war, I saw the huge sign in front of the narrow street signifying the entrance to Chinatown. This should boggle your mind when you think about it. When compared to Vancouver, B.C., San Francisco or even Seattle, the Yokohama counterpart seemed smaller lacking large buildings. We didn't have any time to explore. During America's frontier days, Chinatown signified a ghetto. But in Yokohama I wondered if the Chinatown is in fact or a front for tourist attraction. I did notice many of the shops were represented by Japanese names. The Chinese restaurant where we stopped seemed quite similar to the ones we see here, roomy and attractive. My table fortunately was filled with young Australian ladies. I communicated to the waiters by speaking Japanese, which was understood, in the ladies' request for glasses of water, knives and fork. I used chopsticks.

The day was bright and sunny when I attended Ueno Park in Tokyo. I wanted to see the National Museum of Western Art with its collections of French impressionist paintings. It was closed for most of April. I looked for the statue of Saigo Takamori, historical and almost legendary figure, in the chronicles of Japan. I found it quite easily. He was dressed in robe with his pet dog near him. The next item on the check-off was the memorial plaque for Gen. U.S. Grant. This was more difficult to locate. The bronze historical plaques with his portrait and inscriptions tell of his visit to Ueno Park in 1879. General U.S. Grant, identified as ex-President of the United States, and Mrs. Grant planted Japanese cypress and magnolia trees in the presence of Meiji Tenno.

Before I left the park I thought I'd better take a look at the suspension monorail where the cars ride under the rail. Well, it's something different.

I always liked the sight of huge market place. In the last visit I was able to tour the Tokyo Central Wholesale Market in Kanda. The warehouse complex seems to cover at least two full blocks but I'm sure it was much less than that. Strawberries season was in full swing. Huge apples, oranges, and grapes, as well as tropical fruits including pineapples were stacked in neat order. There were lettuce, tomatoes, potatoes, radishes, onions, and so on. But for the photographers it would be a big disappointment. Everything is neatly packed in cellophanes, plastic bags, gunny sacks, wooden and paper boxes cushioned in styrofoam. We were too late to see the auctioneers but were shown the movies on how the biddings take place. Fruits and vegetables were moved quietly by battery operated vehicles which ran at reckless abandon by skilled drivers.

The following day it was a case of now or never on this trip. I started out at 6 a.m. (already on hour late) to catch the Hibiya subway to the renowned Tsukiji wholesale fish market. It still took about 15 minutes of walking to find the actual location in spite of the map on hand. The auctioneers were still in action. This is really a down-to-earth atmosphere with men and women representing merchants and restaurateurs mingling with the sellers. The hundreds of stacked frozen tunas resembled huge bowling pins. Some of the fishes were being cut with wedge and sledge hammer. A more enterprising ones have installed band saws. Fresh seafoods of all sort including shrimps, squids, shell fishes, octopus were laid out in open display. People were moving about in every direction and some pushing cart. This is what it takes to help feed the 12-million people in Tokyo. Two fishing boats were moored at the dock. I wondered how many more came in during the night.

SOIL AND BUILDING CONCRETE STUDY FOR BUSH HOTEL

The purchase of the Bush Hotel is at a standstill as it waits for confirmation of the building's stability, says Ben Woo, chairman of the International District Chinatown Public Corporation. The hotel is being considered by the Public Corporation as a site for a community center in the International District. The City of Seattle, under block grants, has allocated $240,000 to acquire it by June 1. Before the purchase, tests must be made on the hotel for stability and to determine if it meets building regulations. If the purchase can't be made by the deadline the money will be revoked and funneled to other organizations or projects. Preliminary work by Arai/Jackson/Reyes Architects and Designers was started, which includes a soil and building concrete study. The concrete was found to be weaker than expected and not up to the Seattle City building code. The Portland Cement Association and its main office in Skokie, Ill., was contracted to perform a structural evaluation. Woo said they were contracted because it utilized computers and could perform an ultrasonic scan on the building. The study was completed two months ago. The results were to be sent to the Public Corporation a month ago. When the Public Corporation receives the report, a decision will be made on the purchase of the hotel.--International Examiner.
