- II. Approval of minutes, approval of Treasurer's report
- III. Committee reports
- IV. Announcements
- V. Adjournment.

FROM THE BOARD:

Shea Aoki, JACL representative to the Festival, is asking for volunteer help for the Seattle Cherry Blossom and Japanese Cultural Festival to be held at the Seattle Center April 22-24. The help is needed before these dates to prepare for its opening. Please, call James Mockford, member of the Festival executive committee, at 623-7900. JACL is one of the co-sponsors.

Henry Miyatake who's taken an awfully lengthy amount of his time in Puyallup in negotiating the placement of memorial to the Japanese Americans interned in the fairground, asked permission to negotiate since the JACL and the Fairground Board must come to an agreement on inscriptions for the monument. Motion carries.

Emi Somekawa, formerly of Portland Chapter, and now active leader of the Puyallup Valley Chapter for several years, deserves special credit for organizing Puyallup and Tacoma people in an effort to keep the memorial inside the fair compound, by working through the parent-teachers organizations, the Methodist women of Puyallup, and collected 15 full pages of signed petitions. She provided support for the papers by being interviewed and we saw her on TV media. She went against the American Legion and the Remember Pearl Harbor Committee. We acknowledge Emi Somekawa and thank her for the massive effort.

Sometime in June, Sen. Fleming of the 37th District, has been helpful to Asian community by his legislative work. Sen. Fleming will be honored at a cocktail hour with Hors D'Oeuvres. Four Asian groups will be co-sponsors including our Chapter.

Single fund raising will be made for Redress. Originally, voluntary $5 assessment were to have been made during the filing for membership dues. This has been changed. A separate fund drive is forthcoming.

Large workloads for the International Relations Committee made it necessary to split the committee into two groups, the International Relations and the Hibakusha.

Dave Okimoto, vice president, represented JACL at the JAL's Seattle-Tokyo route inauguration reception at the Olympic Hote.

Mailout crew for the newsletter held March 9 included Al Maida, Wayne Kimura, Mako Nakagawa, Masako Tomita and Eira Nagaoka.

Mako Nakagawa appointed to the board Ken Seno, assistant to the Seattle Public School Superintendent. He is formerly from Hawaii. The board approves.

Hana Masuda provided the cookies for the JACL meeting's refreshments.

Portland will be hosting the JACL Pacific Northwest District Council meeting in December.

Rod Kaseguma has been working on Chapter By-laws and may be discussed at the April meeting.

193 runners participated in the 9066 Fun Run in commemoration of the 40th anniversary of the FDR's signing of the executive order. KOMO-TV ran films and interviewed participants while they were running. The Committee members listed in the March issue of newsletters should be applauded for the classy program featuring Repres. Mike Lowry, Kathryn Bannai, counsel to Dr. Gordon Hirabayashi, in her explanation of the Petition for a writ of error corum nobie, the Taiko Drummers, excellent refreshments, and for the large community participants.

Ben Nakagawa had called for total board to help with the JACL office transition to the adjacent room. Only five showed up. The new room has partitions dividing the room into four sections. The two sections will be occupied by the Chapter and the other two will be used by the Pacific Northwest District JACL Regional Office. In the meantime we need to renovate, paint, lay linoleum and tidying up the rooms in general. Ben asked the volunteers to bring rollers, pans, and rags.

Ken Nakano reported on the dismantling of Mrs. Kiyo Motoda's former Seattle Holiness Church aka Seattle Evangelical Church to be shipped to Meiji Mura for reassembly. Nagoya TV as well as KING-TV Channel 5 recorded the event. Nagoya TV crew made prolonged stay to film the Nikkei cultural life in Seattle and recording interviews of prominent people, funeral and wedding services, Seattle Keiro, as well as taking scenic views of Seattle.

JAPANESE-AMERICANS FILE SUIT FOR REDRESS OF WARTIME INJURIES

Japanese-Americans who were forcibly removed from their homes on the West Coast, arrested and imprisoned during World War II have filed suit against the United States for compensation for their injuries and a judicial declaration of U.S. wrongdoing.

The lawsuit was brought in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia by twenty-five Japanese-Americans and the National Council for Japanese American Redress, who seek to represent the class of approximately 120,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry in a historic action to redress injustices done during the Second World War. The captain of the case is William Hohri et al. v. United States.

The suit states that the United States government unlawfully conspired to deprive Japanese-Americans of their constitutional rights by fabricating claims of "military necessity" in order to expel them from their homes on the West Coast and send them into prison camps deep in the interior of the United States. The suit states that:

At the time of these actions, responsible United States officials knew their actions were in direct contradiction to authoritative intelligence reports already in defendant's possession attesting to the loyalty of the plaintiff class and the absence of any need to subject them to mass deprivations of their civil rights."

The United States is also charged with misrepresenting and suppressing information in the government's possession attesting to the loyalty of Japanese-Americans, and raising false claims before the Supreme Court pertaining to supposed disloyal acts and racial propensities by Japanese-Americans.

Further, the suit charges the United States with maliciously interfering with these Americans' right of access to the courts, by delaying and mooting cases, punishing and threatening persons who challenged the U.S. actions, and threatening to withdraw their rights of United States citizenship and habeas corpus.

The lawsuit is based on substantial new evidence, consisting of previously confidential governmental memoranda and correspondence never before available for public scrutiny. Some of these documents have recently been declassified and released only due to a Congressionally mandated study.

In 1980, Congress authorized a full review of the facts and circumstances underlying these wartime deprivations, and empowered a Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians to study and report on the problem (P.L. 96-317). As a result of extensive hearings and research, the Commission unanimously concluded that the United States' treatment of Japanese-Americans during the war was not justified or motivated by military necessity, but was rather caused by "race prejudice, war hysteria, and a failure of political leadership." Many of the facts reported by the Commission provide direct support to the claims raised in the lawsuit. The Commission's report, entitled "Personal Justice Denied," was issued on February 24, 1983.

The lawsuit charges that the United States actions against Japanese-Americans inflicted manifest injustice on them, including massive deprivations of their constitutional rights as Americans; loss of their homes, businesses, education and careers; severe physical and psychological injuries; loss of life; destruction of family ties; and tremendous personal stigma. Many of these injuries have continued to afflict Japanese-Americans throughout their lives. The suit further charges that the United States has failed to provide full and fair compensation for these injuries.

The twenty-five individuals bringing the suit represent a broad diversity of Japanese-Americans subjected to these wartime actions. They include the very young and the elderly, immigrants as well as second and third generation Americans, the disabled, those who obeyed the military orders, and those who attempted to challenge the United States actions against them. Some were physically or psychologically disabled as a result of their experiences in the prison camps. Several of the named plaintiffs offered to prove their loyalty to the United States by serving in combat duty in the U.S. Army; others refused to be drafted into combat service while the United States was imprisoning them on the basis of their race. All of the individuals bringing the suit suffered great financial and psychological injury, and irreparable losses of liberty and other sacred constitutional rights.

The suit raises 21 separate causes of action against the United States, including violations of plaintiffs' constitutional rights to due process, equal protection from unreasonable search and seizure, habeas corpus, and fair trial, as well as claims for negligence and violations of rights accorded by other federal and state laws. The suit also seeks a judicial declaration that the United States violated the plaintiffs' constitutional and civil rights.

A-J FILE SUIT FOR REDRESS (Cont'd)

The suit seeks approximately $10,000 per cause of action per individual. Then all causes of action are tallied, the suit seeks in excess of $200,000 for each Japanese American who was excluded from the West Coast, arrested, and imprisoned by the United States.

In order to obtain a trial on the issues they raise, the Japanese Americans must first overcome procedural defenses to the suit. These include sovereign immunity and the statute of limitations. Plaintiffs are prepared to present evidence and argue against these defenses and other defenses, if they are raised by the government. For example, evidence showing the United States' misrepresentation and suppression of evidence may serve to suspend the statute of limitations for the bringing of this action. Other strategies to be pursued are left to counsel, a Washington, D.C. lawfirm.

Related lawsuits were filed earlier this year to overturn the criminal convictions of three Japanese Americans who were found to have violated U.S. military orders pertaining to curfew and exclusion of Japanese Americans during the Second World War.
