SEATTLE HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION By Y. Phillip Hayasaka

A report by the Seattle Public Schools on the growth and distribution of minority races indicates some interesting statistics as pertaining to students identified as Japanese.

The report states that at the end of 1964, there were 2,359 Japanese students, representing 2.5% of the total enrollment, in the public schools. Included in this number were 1,379 elementary students, 548 junior high school students, 426 senior high school students and 6 students in special schools. These figures reflected an increase of 751 pupils during the last seven years, or a rise of 46%.

On the senior high school level, the largest number of students attended Garfield (133), with Franklin (121) and Cleveland (101) not far behind. By including Rainier Beach (37), over 90% of all the Japanese students were enrolled in 4 of Seattle's 12 high schools—all in the Central and South End of Seattle.

On the junior high school level, the largest number of students attended Mercer (216). Washington was a distant second with 98 students, and Sharples close behind with 87. These three schools represented 73% of the Japanese students in the junior high school level. By including Rainier Beach (46) and Meany (52), 90% of all Japanese students in the junior high school level attended 5 of the 18 of the 18 of Seattle junior high schools—all in the Central and South End of Seattle.

Japanese students were enrolled in every senior high school in Seattle, however, one junior high school and ll elementary schools had no Japanese students.

Thirty percent of all Japanese students in the elementary level attended three schools—Gatzert (168), Beacon Hill (166), and Van Asselt (118). By including 5 more schools—Kimball (63); Hawthorne (54); Columbia (78); Brighton (69) and Muir (67) over half of all Japanese students attended 8 elementary schools in Seattle. By including an additional 12 schools, over 80% of all Japanese students were enrolled in 20 of the 86 Seattle Elementary Schools—all in the Central and South End of Seattle.

The report also includes the racial distribution of school employees. Out of 6,067 employees surveyed, 95 (1.6%) were Japanese. These included 64 classroom teachers (1.8%), four librarians (3.5%) and one counselor (.9%). Six head secretaries (4.8%); Il in other secretarial work (4.2%); one in the lunchroom (0.4%); and 8 (2 head secretaries, 4 secretarial and clerical and 2 instructors) in the central office (1.5%) complete the list.

The report ends by stating that the data is presented to supply the answer to the inevitable question—"How do the percentage of school employees for the various minority groups compare with those of the entire city's population?"

REPEAL OF LAND LAWS AFTER WORLD WAR II

California, shortly after the end of WWII, began some 59 escheat proceedings against Japanese returning to the West Coast to forfeit land. The U.S. Supreme Court in Oyama vs. California (1947) stated, " . . . the more basic purpose of the statute was to irritate the Japanese, to make economic life in California as uncomfortable and unprofitable for them as legally possible . . . ", violating the "equal protection clause." The result: California Supreme Court declared such land laws unconstitutional, escheat proceedings were brought to a halt. In 1955 California State egislature passed referendum proposing the repeal of the state's land law, and voters repealed it in the 1956 general election.

Likewise, Oregon, Idaho and Utah repealed their land laws, leaving Washington the land office of the McDonnel & Co., a nationwide stock brokerage firm. He is the first Nisei
