CIVIL RIGHTS GROUP THROUGH DETACHED WORKERS PROGRAM HELPS WITH DELINQUENT YOUTHS PROBLEMSSEATTLE HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

By Y. Philip Hayasaka, executive secretary

The Detached Workers Program is not new in the United States. It also is known by such names as Street Workers, Outreach Workers, or Gang Workers program in other cities. Basically, the program deals with social work oriented individuals working with teenage delinquency — reaching these youths wherever they exist, whether it be on the street corner, in the pool hall or at the drive-in.

Seattle's program came into being through the efforts of the Seattle Human Rights Commission and local civil rights organizations. Both groups recognized the growing problem of delinquent and pre-delinquent youths idle during day and night-time hours. Both groups recognized the special volatility of the problem in an area where minority group status of many of these youths make them prone to the kind of violent acting out that has occurred in other areas of the country, where a concentration of poverty, minority group youths, high unemployment and a high dropout rate prevail. And, both groups recognized that traditional social agency programs are not reaching these youths. Therefore, both groups recommended to the mayor that a detached workers program be initiated and a program was submitted by the Seattle Human Rights Commission to attain the necessary funding. Without fanfare, the program was launched in April, 1967, designating the Human Rights Commission as "parent" of the project. A third party contract was then negotiated with CAMP (Central Area Motivation Program) for the conduct and supervision of the program.

Since its inception, the program has gained wide recognition by the delinquent and pre-delinquent youths . . . so much so, that the increasing number of requests for assistance swamps the over busy time of workers.

Calls also were coming from mothers of youngsters who were concerned about their boys' delinquent activities; from school counselors and principals seeking assistance about some potential "troublemakers"; from merchants, hard hit by after school pilfering of their stores; from the park department for assistance in patrolling beaches as summer approached; from parents to locate particular girls and boys that may be heading into trouble; and from concerned citizens of impending fights involving large number of youths.

Not only were the workers reaching the youths and neutralizing their delinquent behavior, but they were involving them in programs of their own planning, such as dances, outings and campings. An important aspect was also in helping the youths find gainful employment. The particular effectiveness of the program appeared to convince the youths that the detached workers were there to help them.

The Detached Workers Program was committed primarily to the prevention of juvenile delinquency in the Central Area. However, the workers were becoming more and more involved on a city-wide scale. Frequently, they were called by parents from other areas, such as Kirkland and Kent. At this date, it appears that the performance of the Detached Workers Program not only may have tremendous impact upon preventing juvenile delinquency, but the program to involve the youths in the Central Area in a meaningful activity by bold intervention holds hope that positive changes can be made in the lives of many youths.

(Editor's note: Central Area educational survey gave the readers a chance to complete the "agree, disagree, or neutral" check list on questions of teaching of minority race cultures, voluntary transfer program, college scholarship assistance for minority, specialized teacher training for better communication with minority students, hiring of more minority race teachers and administrative personnel. Dr. Minoru Masuda whose article follows is a research assistant professor of psychiatry at U.W.)

COMMENTS ON THE CENTRAL AREA EDUCATION QUESTIONNAIRE

By Minoru Masuda, Ph. D.

In the December issue of the JACL newsletter, I initiated a survey of the attitude of the JACL membership regarding some controversial issues about educational processes in the Central Area schools. A questionnaire including nine items which I thought were major issues was devised and sent out with that newsletter. According to Eira Nagaoka, the editor, the (local) circulation of the newsletter was about 630. Only 15 questionnaires have been returned, a 2.4% return considerably less than hoped for. This makes completely uncertain the meaning which attaches to the results.

In general, the responses were favorable toward change in the educational system and the respondents had comments disagreements on some items. Only one of the fifteen respondents was completely negative to these changes or concepts, advocating the status quo, recalling the days at Bailey Gatzert School under Mrs. Mahon (I certainly do remember her!) and in comment implying that the system was not at fault, but the students.

It is emphasized that I do not take this questionnaire results as being representative of the JACL membership. It was only a long shot chance that something meaningful, content-wise, might have come from its distribution. I think that the people who responded were those that had some knowledge about Central Area problems and/or had sufficient concern about them to respond.

The one individual who went "against the grain" was forthright in his opinions. It is my notion that he (or she) is more representative of the JACL membership than are the positive 14. I feel, rightly or wrongly, that those who are positive would be more likely to respond than those who are not, especially in this climate of Negro unrest. The only real conclusion is that there is considerable apathy on this subject on the part of JACL members. Perhaps, this is an example of the "enryo syndrome" that Kitano of UCLA has spoken about, the reticence of expression, and non-participation in external affairs. It may also be that where Negro problems are concerned, the nisei may be even more non-participating.

Whether some of their speculations are correct or not, this small attempt at an attitude survey among JACL memberships on Central Area education did not produce any valid evidence as to the real feelings of JACL members to these problems. In retrospect, I plead guilty to be naive in hoping that it might.
